Abstract

The Deaf community is an oppressed sociolinguistic, collectivist minority that primarily uses sign language. Sign language interpreters are frequently used to bridge the communicative and cultural gap between the members of the Deaf community and hearing people. In the past, many of these interpreters were raised in Deaf households with Deaf parents and/or siblings. Others had Deaf friends or worked in a school for the Deaf. However, the establishment of Interpreter Preparation Programs in the 1970s reoriented sign language interpreter education from community-based development to the academic classroom. This removed the immersion in Deaf cultural values and norms from interpreter development. Consequently, Deaf community members are increasingly disillusioned with what they perceive as culturally inappropriate and oppressive behaviors by some IPP-trained interpreters. Popular Education is proposed as a way to remediate the negative effects of the individualist-based hearing academic reorientation, which can create Language Technicians. Allies, interpreters who strive for social justice and Deaf empowerment, can be created through Popular Education-centered interpreter programs. These programs would be guided by Deaf cultural norms and practices provided by Deaf experts.
