

Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union, 1939-73: A Documentary Survey (R.I.I.A.)

The book presents an account, as reflected in the chief documents and elucidated by notes and and a full analytical commentary, of the shifting course of Soviet-Yugoslav relations since 1939. The Government of pre-war Yugoslavia, strongly anti-Soviet and anti-Communist, established diplomatic relations with Moscow in 1940 in the vain hope of deterring Hitler's advance into the Balkans. Following the Nazi occupation of Yugoslavia the following year, Moscow maintained uneasy formal contact with the Royal Government-in-exile, whilst secretly promoting the Communist led rising against the Axis forces of occupation inside Yugoslavia. The war-time signals (here reproduced) between Tito and the Communist bloc are also included.
