Surveillance State

By Tom Shone

"I'm a bit unconvinced by reality," says Anais Hendricks, the heroine of Jenni Fagan's debut novel, "The Panopticon." "It's fundamentally lacking in something, and nobody seems bothered." When we first meet Anais she is handcuffed in the back of a police car, her school uniform covered in blood, on her way to an institution for young offenders. She has no family, and has never seen so much as a photograph of any relatives. Her hobbies include joyriding, tripping on school days, painting CCTV cameras fluorescent pink and hand-delivering the lights from police cars, covered with glitter. In the desk of her local constabulary. Now 15, she still feels "2 years old and ready
