

Kissing Outside the Lines: A True Story of Love and Race and Happily Ever After

NEW YORK TIMES

"It's a fairy tale to claim we are a "post-racial" country. Not when young people still think they need to honor ugly and antiquated boundaries restricting which of their fellow Americans are worthy of their love and commitment, even if it's only to conform to the previous generation's biases."

Marie Claire

"Witty and bold."

St. Petersburg Times

"Farr may have just written the first handbook for romance in the 21st century."

Entertainment Weekly

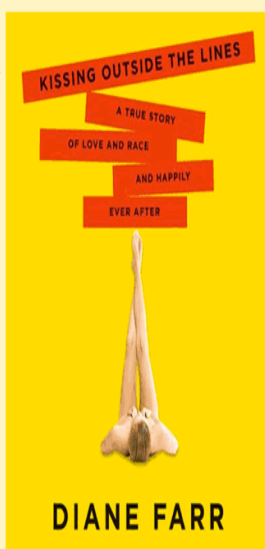

"It also makes you want to see Farr film a documentary on the subject."

Audrey Magazine

"A refreshing insight into the nuances and complexity of modern love."

Publishers Weekly

"Breezily humorous but heartfelt."

I WROTE THIS BOOK FOR THE LOVE AND FEAR OF BABIES. BUT MOSTLY, FEAR OF THEM.

In 2008, a writer's strike shut down the television industry and most of the city of Los Angeles. I was sent home from my TV show "Numb3rs" that I had been playing in for two years as Megan Reeves. While most of us thespians feared we would never work again, I had an additional phobia about being at home.

My life had recently been overtaken by my then nine-month old son. He was a joyous gift in my life, albeit an overwhelming one. However when he was taking a long nap one Saturday afternoon... his sister was conceived. Being pregnant, again, in the same year as my last pregnancy was not my plan, especially since this was still my first year of marriage. And then this sister split herself in two - making me pregnant with twins.

I am not the kind of woman who defines myself by marriage. Or motherhood. I'm an ambitious, workaholic, recovering beauty queen. Yet, at thirty-seven years old I was fast on my way to having three children under a year and a half in age. I would have to quit Numb3rs. And give up my breadwinner status to become my children's primary caregiver and my husbands...bitch. And I was practicing my bitchiness all the time - for more reasons than just the mountain of diapers I was about to step into.
