Chapter 2: Health Assessment

MULTIPLE CHOICE

1. A nurse is collecting a health history from a client and feels the client is not reliable. One recommended way to verify some of the client data is to
 - a. ask the client the same questions but in a different manner.
 - b. confront the client with your suspicions.
 - c. find and question a secondary source.
 - d. have another nurse try to get data from the client.

ANS: C

Clients may be poor historians and unable to provide accurate data. If there is a secondary source such as a significant other or family member available, ask them some of the health history questions. A client who is confused will not be able to answer accurately even if you ask questions in different ways. Confrontation can lead to alienation. Having another nurse question an unreliable client is unlikely to garner valid data.

MSC: Physiological Integrity Reduction of Risk Potential

2. The nurse is collecting a health history on a middle-aged African American male. The nurse asks about past blood pressure screening because the incidence of hypertension is higher in this ethnic group than in others. This is an example of
 - a. a generalization based on the nurse's limited experience with African Americans.
 - b. bias, and the nurse should not question the client about blood pressure screening.
 - c. stereotyping the client based on the client's ethnic/racial group.
 - d. using valid research data to focus questions on the client's specific risks.

ANS: D

Reliable research finding concerning group characteristics or similarities may be applied to a specific client who belongs to that group. Generalizations, stereotypes, and biases have no place in nursing care.
