What is Professional Negligence?

Professional advisers such as legal advisers should apply 'reasonable skill and care' when they are advising their clients. This is especially very important in the case of personal injury or medical negligence claims where compensation should be provided for long term care, lost earnings and damage for injury.

In the above case if you loose out because of bad legal advice, you have all the rights to recover compensation from the legal advisor you have hired.

Practically it may arise in several ways such as:

Missed time limits

Your legal advisor has missed the time line (court deadline) for beginning a claim which is usually three years from the time of injury and because of which the claim is struck out.

Ending the case too soon

This is a scenario where a case has been settled before injury was healed or the case was settled without consulting or obtaining medical evidence on the time frame of recovery. In certain case where recovery takes longer or there are other complications then these will not be compensated. A valid claim is when inadequate advice was provided at the time of settlement.

Undetected injuries

There are certain injuries like subtle brain injuries which may be missed when cases are settled. Other kind of injuries may carry future risks like broken bones could lead to arthritis at later stage in life. These risk should be compensated in settlement.
